Polytunnels – the movie!

Lights, camera, action... First Tunnels' internet video channel is helping polytunnel growers to live the self-sufficiency dream

IN THE bleak mid-winter... crops were snug, protected from biting winds, chilly frosts and a blanket of snow in the comfort of a polytunnel.

Okay, so we've tweaked the lyrics to this classic Christmas carol, but only because gardeners across the UK are discovering the benefits that year-round polytunnel-growing can bring.

The Christmas break is the perfect time to order a polytunnel for your garden or allotment. Not only can you beat the VAT increase, which comes into force on 4 January, but gardeners will benefit from quicker delivery times before the spring growing season gets underway.

So why is there so much interest in polytunnel gardening? Food price inflation currently stands at 4.4 per cent, according to the British Retail Consortium. That's adding a whopping £230 to annual food bills.

Now here's the good news: As polytunnels are usually bigger than greenhouses, and hold heat better, food can be cultivated all year round. Even in a small tunnel, it's possible to become self-sufficient with home-grown vegetables.

Finding out how to do it is easy. First Tunnels, which is offering customers a discount of 10 per cent off everything in December, has an internet channel on YouTube which is dedicated to polytunnels (youtube.com/polytunnels).

The videos address many commonly-asked questions: how easy is it to construct a polytunnel, how will it be delivered, how can rainwater be harvested, and are polytunnels organic?

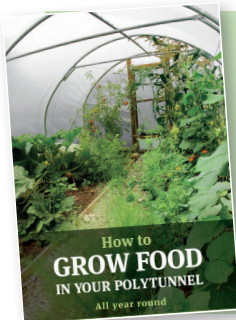

The channel allows web-users to watch First Tunnels' expert fitters professionally installing a polytunnel in less than a day (of course, DIY enthusiasts can easily erect a polytunnel themselves – and help is just a phone call away).

If you need to clean, repair or order a new cover for your polytunnel, there's a wealth of free, expert advice on offer.
